Public Meeting To Discuss McCarran-Walter Act

Congressional Candidates To Give Views

Congressional candidates from the three congressional districts in this area will discuss U. S. immigration policy at a public meeting on October 13, sponsored by the St. Louis Committee on Immigration Policy.

The meeting will be held at the First Unitarian Church, Kingshighway and Waterman, at 8:15 p. m. It will be open to the public. Following brief talks by each of the Congressional candidates stating his position on U. S. immigration policy as currently expressed in the McCarran-Walter Act, there will be a question period from the floor.

The McCarran-Walter Act, known as Public Law 414, has been the subject of a great deal of controversy, both in and out of Congress. The Act was passed by a narrow margin over President Truman's veto in 1952. Within recent months several bills have been introduced into both the House and the Senate aimed at a complete revision of the McCarran-Walter Act. It has been attacked as unduly restrictive and discriminatory, with adverse effects on our foreign policy and relationships with other nations.

The meeting on October 13 is for the purpose of discussing the views

Commemorative Medal Struck In Honor Of Jewish Tercentenary

Shown above are reproductions of both sides of the American Jewish Tercentenary's Commemorative Medal, especially struck in honor of the celebration of the 300th anniversary of Jewish settlement in the United States. The front of the medal (left) depicts a family group, symbolizing American freedom and security, and bears the Tercentenary theme, "Man's Opportunities and Responsibilities Under Freedom." The reverse side shows the seal of the Tercentenary. The medal was designed by the prize-winning sculptor, Nancy Dryfoos, chairman of the Tercentenary Fine Arts Committee. The medal, in gold, silver and bronze finish, will be presented to communal and civic leaders during the American Jewish Tercentenary observance.

of local Congressional candidates on this issue. It will be open to the public without charge.

Jewish organizations represented on the Committee are the Jewish Community Relations Council, the National Council of Jewish Women, and the St. Louis Rabbinical Association. The St. Louis Jewish Young Adult Council represented the young adult Jewish community in the planning of this program.

The St. Louis Jewish Young Adult Council authorized "... positive action on the proposed Lehman Immigration Bill in the form of an interfaith educational meeting," in a resolution May 10, 1954.

Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver will speak on "The Meaning of American Jewish History." The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will play music by American Jewish composers, and Jacob Krachmalnick, a native of St. Louis, now concert master of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, will be the soloist.

The first fall meeting of the Parents-Teachers Association of Tpheris Israel was addressed by Bob Ellis, president, at their gathering Wednesday, Sept. 22. President Ellis expressed "his thanks for the wonderful results of the extensive program for soliciting new members," which resulted in the registration of almost 200 families, with a total of almost 300 children in the Hebrew and Sunday schools.

"The spirit and enthusiasm in this project was a striking example of the activities of this P.T.A. since the time of its inception in January, 1954," stressed Ellis. "It would be difficult to find a comparable group of parents who have worked so diligently together and cooperate so well, for a common objective, namely: to forge a closer understanding between the school and the home, and to raise money for the extra necessities and incidentals with which to operate the school to its utmost capacity."

Ellis introduced the various officers and committee chairmen to the audience. Among the activities in the immediate future were announced a Card Party at Tpheris Israel hall on Wednesday night, Nov. 17, and a square dance at Tpheris Israel hall on Sunday night, Dec. 26. Other activities to follow in 1955 include a film festival and a money raising project. The P.T.A. is also initiating an adult education program, which will include courses in Hebrew and in Jewish customs and traditions.

Various guest speakers included: Al Roufa of the Midland District of the Boy Scout Council. (Tpheris Israel is in the process of obtaining its Scout charter, and within the next month, a Cub Scout Pack will be organized). Dr. Isadore Fish, Supt. of the Board of Jewish Education and Dr. Martin Nahum, Educational Director of Tpheris Israel. Nahum also heads the Junior Congregation, another P.T.A. project that meets every Saturday morning.

"The youngsters are very enthusiastic about this project, as well as the special parties which are held for them on every festive holiday," reported Dr. Nahum.

The final speaker of the evening was Rabbi Charles Hartman who expressed his pleasure at the wonderful attendance at the meeting, and his confident hope that "this dynamic group of parents will go ever forward to make Tpheris Israel one of the outstanding educational and social centers in our community." The next meeting of the Tpheris Israel P.T.A. will be on Wednesday night, Oct. 20 at 9:30 p. m.

Israel Bond Rally To Honor Edward G. Robinson

Veteran actor, Edward G. Robinson will be guest of honor at an "Admission-by-Israel-Bond" event at 8 p. m. Tuesday, Oct. 26, 1954 in the Gold Room of the Jefferson Hotel. Sponsored by the St. Louis Committee, State of Israel Bonds, in commemoration of the 3000th Anniversary of the City of Jerusalem, the event was announced by Israel Bond Chairman Leonard V. Finder.

In addition to honoring the founding of the ancient Jewish city, the event will also tender honors to Robinson in recognition of his achievement as a leading figure of the American stage and screen. Several local lay leaders will also be honored for their contribution toward the betterment of the State of Israel through their support of the Israel Bond program, Finder said.

Admission to the event which Finder termed "Of singular high honor and merit" will be through the purchase of State of Israel Bonds in the amount of $100 or through the sale of $500. "Time has swung the full circle" Finder, local Israel Chairman, said in commenting upon the 300th Anniversary of Jerusalem in the light of the 300th Anniversary this year, which marks the founding of the Jewish community in the United States.

"Three hundred years ago, Jews whose early forebearers founded the ancient Jewish city of Jerusalem, themselves founded a new Jewish community in America.

LUNCHEON RAISES $14,000 FOR HUC-JIR

At the luncheon in honor of Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, held at the Columbian Club the day after Rosh Hashonah, $14,000.00 was raised for the combined campaign of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion.

Sidney Baer, Morton J. May, M. H. Mandel, and Charles Yalem pledged $1,000.00 each. Rabbi Eisendrath announced that not a single congregation in St. Louis last year came up to the national per capita giving, and that the St. Louis average was considerably below the national average. He urged the luncheon guests to give "at least 1 per cent of what you spend each year on vacations, travel, and luxuries."

These American Jews prospered in a time and contributed to the growth of their own community when the rebirth of a Jewish city of Jerusalem was a glowing dream of prayerful hope. To them the rebirth of Jerusalem—the city from which their ancestral roots stem existed only in a limbo of the future and the fulfillment of which became a Jewish prayer around the world."

Traditionalist Jews observe Sukos for eight days and follow with a holiday known as Simchas Torah, or the "Rejoicing Over the Law," when the cycle of weekly Biblical readings is concluded with the last verses of Deuteronomy and immediately begun again from the beginning of the Book of Genesis.

Reform Jews observe Sukos for seven days and on the eighth celebrate Shmini Atzeret ("the eighth day convocation") with rites similar to those on Simchas Torah.

Patients at the Jewish Sanatorium, Fee Fee Rd., Robertson, Mo., gathered on Rosh Hashana for their annual services, a tradition at the sanatorium, a division of Jewish Hospital of St. Louis. Some came in wheel chairs to the make-shift chapel and their home-made ark. The group holds only one service on Rosh Hashana morning because of the inability of most of the patients to get around. However, the chapel and home-made ark are treasured possessions, along with the Shofar, among these elderly Jews in Robertson, Mo., just outside St. Louis. The Sanatorium is to be moved into Jewish Hospital when the present hospital building program is completed. Construction plans at the hospital call for a chapel of worship. Conducting the services was Frederick Polusky (extreme right), assisting were Jake Altin (center) and Harry Shaffer. The Shofar was blown by Mr. Shaffer (picture on the left), while Mr. Altin holds Torah and Mr. Polusky chants services.

Local Health Plan Evokes Interest At Conference

The St. Louis Community Health Plan, which is now being put into effect through the enlargement and modernization of the facilities at Jewish Hospital, evoked a great deal of interest at the conference for presidents and executives of Jewish federations and Jewish hospitals that was held in Philadelphia, Sept. 25 and 26.

Three St. Louisans, Herman L. Kaplow, Richard K. Weil and Dr. David Littauer, attended the conference. Its theme was "The Jewish Hospital—Today and Tomorrow," including discussions on problems of current hospital planning and financing, integration of medical services and community responsibility for medical education and research.

Dr. David Littauer, executive director of Jewish Hospital of St. Louis, and Herman L. Kaplow, executive director of the Jewish Federation, were discussants in the meeting on the "State of Jewish Communities in Current Hospital Planning." Richard K. Weil, president of Jewish Hospital, was chairman of the session devoted to "Integration of Jewish Community Medical Services."

The conference was sponsored by the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds which is the national association of Jewish federations throughout the country. Representatives from practically every Jewish community that has a Jewish hospital were present.

The Dean of Students, Arno Haack, will preside over one two-hour session on working with members of organizations. Dr. Nathan Kohn, Jr. teaches classes at Washington University in Group Dynamics and Human Relations. His two-hour session will be devoted to those aspects of leadership. He will open up issues such as: "What makes some groups productive. Others unsuccessful?" "What do we need to know about reactions and interactions among group members?"

Classes will meet at United Hebrew Temple, 225 S. Skinker Blvd. on Wednesdays from 10:00 to 12:00 a. m. Registration may be made by mailing $5.00 to Mrs. I. W. Rubin, 745 Glenridge, Clayton 5, Mo.

Ministers And Politics

Whether religious leaders should make statements on political and economic issues has been an issue among many religious groups. Usually the ministers maintain that their very function in society obliges them to take an active part in politics, while the laymen urge that religious leaders should confine themselves to spiritual matters.

Religion is supposed to permeate daily living and form the outlook and actions of its adherents. The leaders of such a philosophy, then, whose message is acclaimed as the overall guiding principle not only have a right but an obligation to state loudly and unequivocally their views on all major issues—provided they have any.

Some time ago Rabbi Samuel Thurman faced the issue of China's recognition and advocated a reversal of our State Department's policy. In a sermon on Yom Kippur Eve Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath condemned the rearming of Germany. He stated, "Not God today, but expediency, appears to be our goal. Thus we form alliances, not on the basis of moral values, but for the sake of practicality alone. This is illustrated by our recent part with a neo-Fascist Germany, rather than our insistence upon the recognition by Germany, as well as by others, of the basic democratic principles enshrined in our Jewish faith and our neighbors' Christian faith."

That all shades of opinion are present among the rabbinate is evident from a release which notes that Rabbi Benjamin Schultz of New York was a toastmaster at a testimonial dinner in honor of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's chief aid, Roy M. Cohn.

Whether we agree or not with the opinions expressed, even such as Rabbi Schultz', of which we cannot be very proud, the right of ministers to express their point of view is an intrinsic function of their spiritual role in the community.

BIRTHPLACE OF B'NAI B'RITH

THE BIRTHPLACE OF B'NAI B'RITH was Sinsheimer's gas-lit cafe in the heart of New York's lower East Side, where 12 men gathered in 1843 to discuss the need for uniting Jews from many different backgrounds into an organization that would enable them to work constructively for their own welfare and the welfare of the entire community. These men, led by Henry Jones (insert) founded the B'nai B'rith, now the oldest and largest Jewish service organization in the world. Its lodges, women's chapters and youth groups are located in 33 countries throughout the free world; in Israel alone there are 50 lodges and chapters. B'nai B'rith's 350,000 men and women are actively engaged in a host of activities designed to unite Jews, defend their rights, and improve their lot here and in other lands throughout the world. This photograph of the small original building (left) on Essex street, where B'nai B'rith was founded, was taken in 1928 before the building was torn down.

Statue Presented to Jewish Religious Union

A WOOD CARVING, "The Sacrifice," showing Abraham, Isaac and the ram which, according to Scriptures, the patriarch offered to the Lord instead of his son, was presented to the Union of American Hebrew Congregations by Edward M. M. Warburg (second from left), noted philanthropist and general chairman of the United Jewish Appeal. Shown here, at the Union's center, the House of Living Judaism-Berg Memorial, where presentation took place, is the sculptor, Walter Midener (left), of Detroit; Dr. Maurice N. Eisendrath, president of the Union; and Dr. Samuel S. Hollender (right), of Chicago, chairman of the Union's national executive board. The Union is the national parent body of American Reform synagogues; its center is located at 838 Fifth Avenue, in New York City. Statue, formerly on exhibit at Whitney Museum of Modern Art, is the gift of Mr. Warburg's mother, Mrs. Frieda Schiff Warburg. Head of statue is modeled after that of Dr. Leo Baeck, heroic German rabbi who survived Nazi brutality.

BOOK REVIEW

"Wisdom Of The Talmud" By Bokser Adds Little To Jewish Thought

Review by STANLEY W. HARRIS,
District No. 2 Director B'nai B'rith Youth Organization

("The Wisdom of the Talmud," by Rabbi Ben Zion Bokser. Philosophical Library, N. Y. pp. 180, price $3.75.)

If one has an above average, is present in the quotations and background in Jewish history and powerful philosophy of the Talmud, Talmudic thought, the "Wisdom of the Talmud," by Ben Zion Bokser will add little to this knowledge or insight. The book suffers chiefly from the fact that it is impossible to abstract the Talmud or to trace its significance in a hundred and eighty pages.

Unfortunately Rabbi Bokser fails even further. He fails to excite or stimulate the reader to dig deeper. He tries to answer the unanswerable. He does not write with proper balance.

The "Wisdom of the Talmud" is too much history and too little "wisdom." At first one thinks the study is going to emphasize Talmudic content. However, one's hopes are dashed. Rather the reader is overwhelmed with dates and historical events. One wonders if the author became so involved in historical detail that he had difficulty extricating himself. Since the author could not bring himself in rewriting to cut his historical analysis, perhaps he then cut his analysis of Talmudic content. Thus he brings his work to an abrupt and ignominious end. But worst of all, the author does not seem to realize this frustrating effect.

The final chapters analyzing the Talmud are rushed, chopped, and dogmatic. True, some of the beauty valiant effort to relate the healthy direction of Talmudic interpretations to our own day. However, it is also true that the author often tried too hard. He quotes those passages that add to his own interpretation. He does not objectively emphasize the dilemmas with which the Talmud is filled. He does submit the error—which is only human and obvious. He does not view the Talmud with the true scientific eye, which he callously claims. He is much, much too quick, too sure, and too careless.

Yet, if one knows little of the history which surrounds the Talmud or one is interested in a superficial view—stressing the authors own interpretation of modern Jewish thought in historical perspective—the book will prove of interest. The book should also prove of high interest to those among us who have no time or effort for the truly great literature and original sources. Or those who like to get their learning spoon-fed in half measures. Perhaps, the reviewer is too harsh on a book that was written in a day of digests, paper-backs, and capsule "wisdom."

ISRAEL PROPOSES PACTS WITH ARABS

Israel offered to enter into a series of non-aggression pacts with its Arab neighbors as the first step toward ending the mounting tension in the Middle East. Ambassador Abba Eban told the United Nations General Assembly the present trend of Arab policy appeared to be directed toward resumption of the war with Israel. He also urged nations outside the Middle East to refrain from provoking an arms race in that area by "premature and especially by one-sided military arrangements." This apparently was aimed primarily at the United States and Britain.

Three Hundred Years Of American Jewry

By SALO W. BARON

America's manifest destiny lay in the main in its people's persistent pioneering along uncharted paths. American Jewry, too, has been engaged for the last three centuries in a gigantic pioneering effort which has accrued to its own benefit, and that of the nation and the world at large.

From its inception, the Jewish people found itself in the extraordinary position of having to blaze new paths in the fields of religion and ethics. Its ethical and historical monotheism has indeed been its immortal contribution to world civilization. After the loss of its national independence, it lived in an increasingly vast dispersion amidst a tantalizing variety of civilizations, races and creeds. As a minority, frequently viewed with hostility by its neighbors, it often had to carve for itself special niches in the economic and social structures of the countries in which it happened to live. By thus being forced to detect ever new avenues of making a living, in domains not fully appropriated by existing vested interests, the Jews often unwittingly pioneered along new lines of economic endeavor and social coexistence. But nowhere could they find a more congenial atmosphere for their pioneering spirit than in the United States, an entire nation of pioneers and explorers.

No less vital was the contribution of the American Jewish worker. For the most part arriving in this country with the deep conviction that he was coming to a promised land of liberty and security, he doubly resented the sweatshop and those other forms of industrial exploitation which characterized the formative state of the American industrial revolution after the Civil War. Always mindful of his heritage of social justice and democratic cooperation, he gradually evolved certain patterns of labor organization which proved extremely helpful during the slow and painful progress of American labor to its present condition of high achievement. Jewish unionism will indeed remain a memorable chapter in the saga of the American workman.

Less well known is the Jewish share in American agriculture. Coming from countries where their ancestors had been shut out from the possession of land and tillage of the soil for many centuries, most American Jewish immigrants settled in the rapidly expanding metropolitan areas. However, many Jewish individuals were able to perform pioneering services even in this domain. From the colonial production of the sugar beet and indigo, to the most recent cultivation of meat and dairy products, of tobacco or grapes, Jewish farmers have left their imprint on both the mass production and marketing of some of these major American staples.

All these achievements have often exacted a very high price. Pioneers are rarely popular among their contemporaries and neighbors. Hostility to the Jewish people, moreover, has been an unbroken heritage of the non-Jewish world for many centuries. Antisemitism and anti-Jewish discrimination have often reared their ugly heads also in this great country of liberty and equality. Internally, too, acids of agnosticism and communal disorganization have at times menaced the very survival of the Jewish community. Nevertheless, the American Jews have always overcome such threatening crises. Now on the eve of the fourth century of their historic career they may, therefore, look forward with calm and equanimity to continued creative Jewish living, and uninterrupted economic as well as cultural pioneering.

People On The Move —

Federation Facts

(A report to the Jewish Community of St. Louis on some of the activities of the Jewish Federation by Herman L. Kaplow, Executive Director, Jewish Federation of St. Louis.)

Much has been said and written about the mobility of the American population as a result of our participation in World War II. The erection of atomic facilities and tremendous industrial plants have resulted in the creation, almost overnight, of new and fairly large-sized cities where only a few years before very few if any people had resided. The requirements of war mobilization either stimulated or required individuals and families to pick up and move to parts of the country that they had never seen before.

On the local level there was a combination of high income and shortages of desirable housing which resulted in a wide-spread desire, on the part of individuals and families, to improve their housing accommodations. For many people this meant the building of homes in the suburban areas and for others it meant moving from modest rental districts to more desirable sections of the city or perhaps directly into the more expensive suburban areas.

This mobility of the local population has had exceedingly important effects, in St. Louis as in other cities, upon the provision of health, welfare and recreational services for people.

The Jewish people are no exception to this population movement. In St. Louis, the Jewish Federation and its local member agencies were aware some time ago of the fact that the Jewish population has been moving westward at a rather rapid rate. In 1945 approximately 49% of the Jewish population lived in the county and 51% in the city. A recent study by the Federation shows that slightly more than 62% of the Jews of St. Louis now live in the county and not quite 38% in the city. The greatest influx has been into the northern and western sections of University City with a significant number of Jewish people moving into Clayton and other areas of the county. The people came primarily from the area around Easton and Page Aves. with a significant number coming also from the general area of the University City "loop."

Population movement in the Jewish community has had its greatest effect on the ability of the Jewish Community Centers Association (formerly Y.M.H.A., Council House and Camp Hawthorn) to provide the kinds of group work and recreational services that the Jewish community has come to expect over the years.

When the Y.M.H.A. was first built almost 30 years ago it was located on the westernmost edge of the Jewish population area.

Since then, however, the population has moved so far west from the Y.M.H.A. as to make it inconvenient for people to use it as often as they would like and practically impossible for younger children to use it because of the distances involved.

Council House has been similarly affected by the population movement. Many people who used to use Council House no longer live in that area.

All of this has meant that the Federation and the Jewish Community Centers Association have had to make careful studies as to where facilities for the Jewish community's group work and recreational activities should be located. Such studies have been underway for the past several months and some findings and conclusions of these studies are expected in the near future.

A good deal has already been done in meeting some of the needs of the Jewish residents in the county, particularly the children, during the past couple of years with the limited facilities and services that are now available. Information on these activities as well as other phases of the problems involved will be contained in future issues of this column.

YOU and YOUR CHILD

By Abraham J. Simon, Ph. D., Counselor in Child Development and Family Relations

I had hoped to receive several bags of mail from readers by this time, but not enough has been forthcoming! This puts quite a strain on a columnist, for many reasons. Reader reaction is important to gauge public interest and to choose topics that are close to the hearts of the people. Most people when they write are, in fact, representative of a large number of people. By reacting to the question or problem of one person, we inevitably meet the interests of many people. I hate to disappoint anyone who would like to believe that his private peck of anxieties is unique.

And, of course, let us not forget the ego satisfaction of the columnist in receiving so much mail.

Having nothing specific of this type, I can always fall back on that old reliable, and write a column about sex. This quaint dialogue between mother and child illustrates so well the remarkable change in public attitude toward sex education!

Joey: (age 4) Mama, where do I come from?

Mama: (delighted at the opening) Blah! Blah! Blah! Blah! Blah! —(for a long time and with all fine detail elaborately described).

Joey: Oh!—But I still don't know where I come from. Louis who plays with me in nursery school says he comes from Clayton. Where do I come from?

From the Victorian attitudes of secrecy and prudity, in less than two generations we have moved to extreme frankness and casualness (allegedly with the approval of modern psychology). No adolescent social status is secure unless fully informed and equipped with contraceptives.

I must emphatically declare that this is a fantastic cabal on modern psychological theory.

What has happened is the old familiar story of throwing out the baby with the bath water. It is true that sex is not something to be kept secret, or enjoyed only guiltily in the dark, and when equipped with a state license and sanctioned by a religio-civil ritual called a marriage ceremonial. But it certainly is in quite a different category than a game of tennis, a hike in the woods, or an automobile ride. In lifting the mantle of secrecy and guilt, modern psychology was quite correct. But the second part of the contribution of modern psychology, the need to develop mature and responsible personal and social standards of sex behavior was ignored. The public bought only the cocktail and the desert of the dinner. The meat and potatoes were completely ignored.

We see evidence of this sort of thing in many aspects of our society. The rapid increase in too early marriage, the increase of divorce, of juvenile delinquency, the widespread bizarre comics, the saturation of radio and television with crimes of violence, the increase of teenage automobile accidents and death, all these data are symptomatic of a lifting of external controls and a failure to develop controls from within which assure personal and social well being.

Just how this may be better accomplished than is being currently experienced by parents is a subject for many topics. We will try sex education for young children in our next.

The Fixture Marts added two more trophies to the one they copped on Labor Day in the JWB Midwest Consolation Tournament at Cincinnati, by finishing on top of the Blue League Division and winning the "Y" championship. The Atoms picked up the other team trophy for their first-place finish in the White League . . . The individual trophies went to Marty Heligman of the Fixture Marts and Ed Stein of the Atoms as Most Valuable Players in their respective leagues . . . Joe King, playing with the Apollos, and Larry Sanders of the Sentinels, received the awards for sportsmanship.

The Old Testament in Modern Art now covers the front lounge wall of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the University of Alabama. This 11 by 25 foot mural was painted in modern semi-abstract style by Prof. Howard C. Goodson, of the University Art Department. The tablet of the Ten Commandments, Moses' cradle, the burning bush and illustrations of Jewish holidays can be seen in this portion of the tremendous mural. Prof. Goodson, an Episcopalian, conferred at each stage of the mural's development with Rabbi Henry A. Fischel, right, director of the Hillel Foundation at the University of Alabama.
